PANEL DISCUSSION Leadership Commitment to Staff Safety

Our power as leaders comes from how we show up.

How we behave, what we say, the energy we bring to each interaction and situation are often underappreciated tools for moving us toward desired outcomes. As leaders, every day we have opportunities to set the tone for our teams and our organization.

Vicki L Flaherty

Set the TONE for our discussion today

“Our Agency is in many ways is still learning how to segway from crawling to walking on the path to OH&S compliance”

Hazard assessments are a core part of every occupational health and safety program.

They are necessary for employers to focus their efforts in the right areas, and develop worker training, inspections, emergency response plans, etc., specific to the hazards on their work site(s).

An incident is an unplanned event that results in loss. When an incident occurs, regardless of whether there was any damage or injury, employers should consider it a warning and opportunity to learn from.

Best practice is to investigate to determine the root cause of the incident and then adjust your standard operating practices and training accordingly.
